Course Topics (level specific)

Russian Grammar Intensive

A structured introduction to the Russian grammar system, its sections, etymology, current trends and potential future development as well as the ways to explain and introduce the main concept to others.

Verbs of Motion without prefixes

This topic targets participants' comprehension of one of the most complex parts of Russian grammar. The course boosts participants' own competence and provides insights on how to explain this difficult but important grammar to others.

Verbs of Motion with prefixes An understanding of verbs of motion with prefixes takes a Russian learner to another level of language competence. These verbs form a significant and complex layer in Russian grammar that stretches to other sections. These sessions explore the subject and give practical advice on how to present, structure, and explain this grammar.

Verbal Government

Verbal government is a cornerstone of Russian syntax. Participants' own skills are developed through an in-depth comparative analysis.

Verbal Aspects

If a foreigner ever masters the verbal aspects he is considered absolutely fluent in Russian. This section of Russian grammar poses the biggest problem for students of all nationalities at any level of Russian. The lessons offer a systematic approach to explaining and implementing these skills, and as an outcome the participants have a clear structured system of verbal aspects.

Difficult Cases of Russian Grammar Culture

The topic presents and explains the most complex and difficult cases of Russian grammar

Culture

Cultural visits and activities

Course Content and Strategies

This programme concentrates on general Russian through communication.

It aims to equip participants with a deep understanding of grammar as well as to give them a chance to exercise and refine their own command of the language.

Only Russian is spoken in the classroom. Class dynamics include individual, pair and group work, discussions, debates, role-plays, presentations, written tasks and listening exercises. The smaller size of the afternoon group gives participants the opportunity to be fully engaged in peer group communication, practice and consolidation of new material.
